Cal OES Southern Region Activity In Response To Heat Event

Cal OES Southern Region has been working closely with Operational Areas in the region and National Weather Service partners to monitor activity related to the current heat event. A staffing pattern has been developed, should the Southern REOC need to staff a Level II or higher activation.

Operational Area Activities

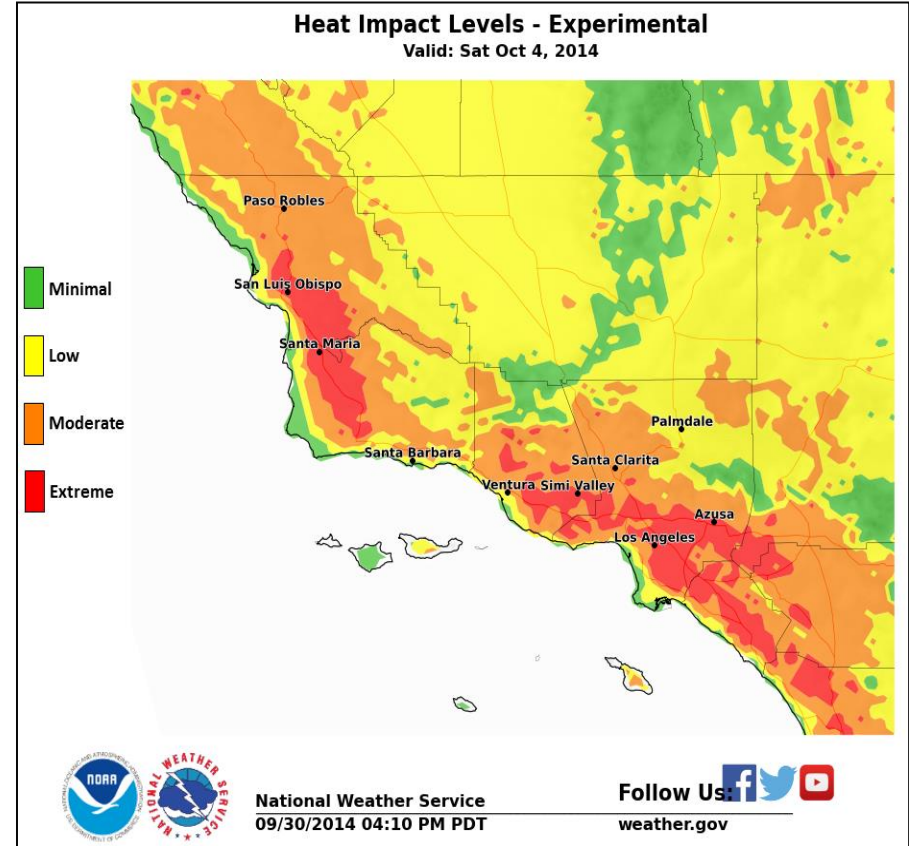

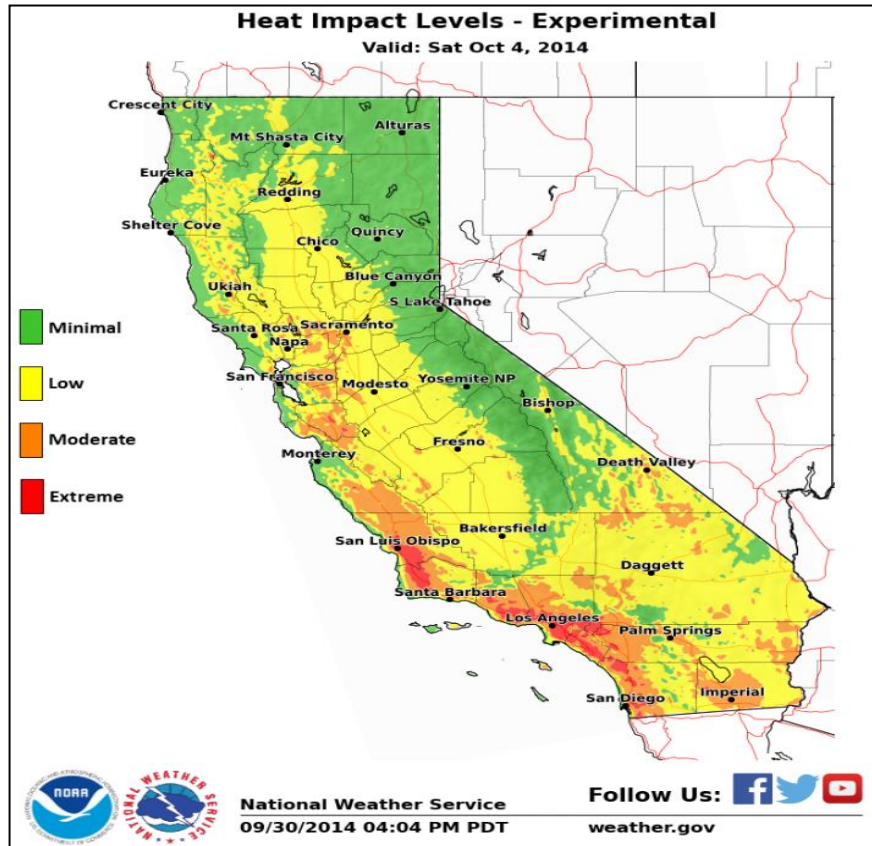

All Southern Region Operational Areas have been polled for special planning or activities related to the heat event. All Operational Areas are closely monitoring the event; none plan to activate at this time. The following Southern Region Operational Areas have additional planning or activities:

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Dry and mild conditions will persist for the next several days as a strong ridge of high pressure gradually shifts east. It will be clear in most areas but clouds will return to the coast on Monday as the onshore flow increases.

San Francisco Weather:

Dry weather conditions and warm temperatures will persist through the beginning of the workweek as high pressure remains along the West Coast. Temperatures gradually cool each day through late week as onshore flow increases and the high pressure weakens.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

Dry and warm weather is expected through next week under a prominent high pressure ridge over the West Coast.

Hanford Weather:

High pressure will bring mostly clear skies through the week with unseasonably warm afternoon temperatures.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

High pressure aloft and weak offshore flow at the surface will result in another hot day today, although it will be cooler near the coast. A cooling trend is expected Monday through Thursday as the upper high breaks down and a weak upper trough pushes into the West Coast. There will be increasing night through morning low clouds and fog in coastal areas, pushing into many valley areas by midweek. Another round of offshore winds is possible by Friday or Saturday bringing some warming to the region once again.

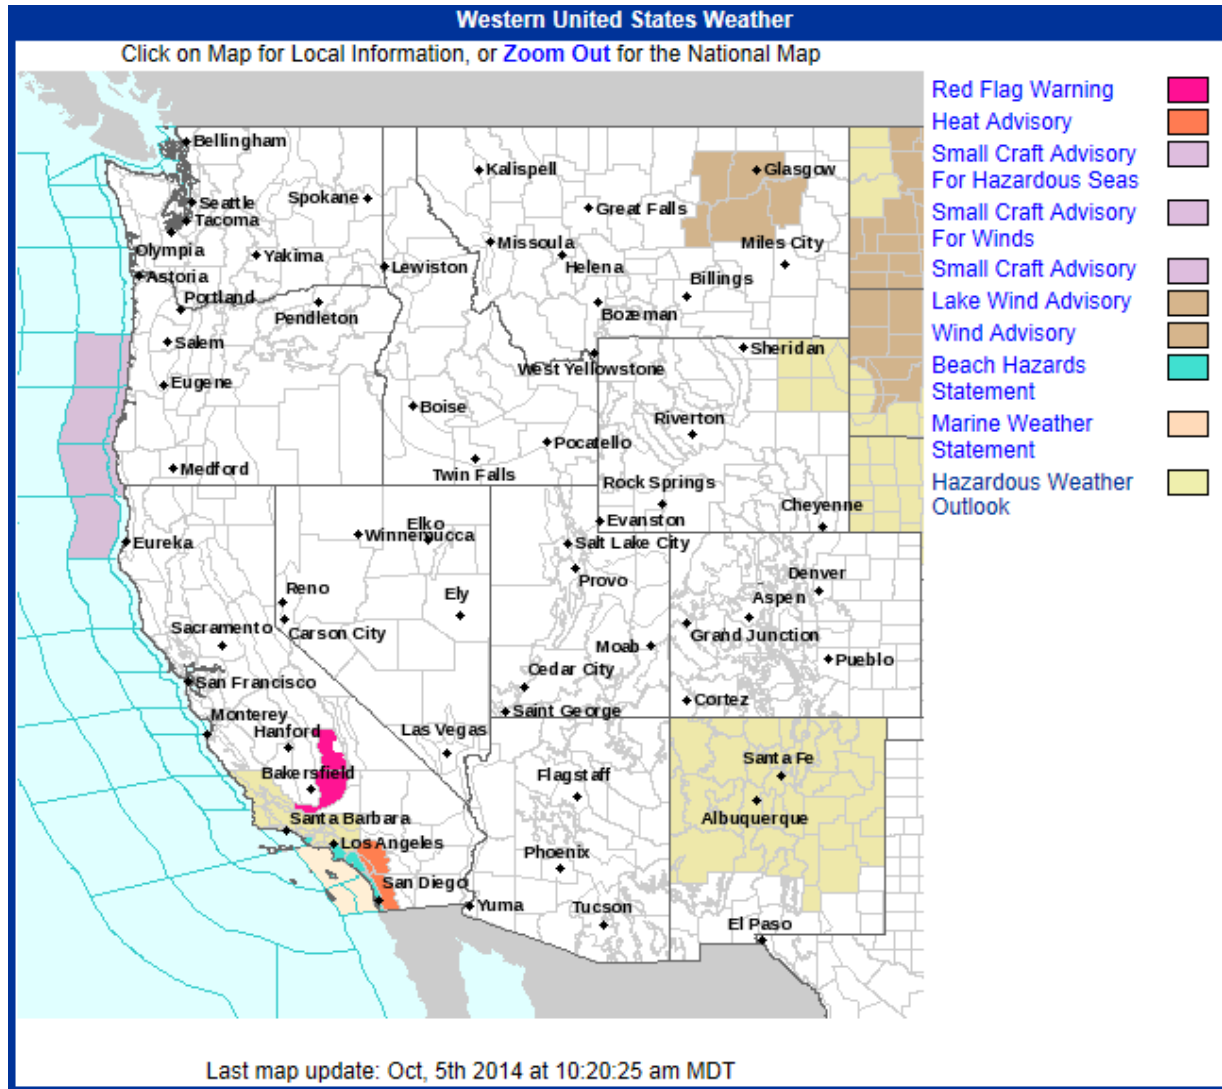

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

The upper-level ridge will continue to weaken through Tuesday, gradually cooling high temperatures and redeveloping the marine layer. Weak low pressure aloft will lower high temperatures to near average for early October by Wednesday with areas of night and morning low clouds and fog west of the mountains. High pressure aloft is forecast to rebuild along the West Coast next weekend, likely resulting in warmer weather and a shallow marine layer.

Southeast California Weather:

A high pressure system will continue to provide dry weather with above normal temperatures today into Monday. For the latter portion of the work week, moisture will gradually decrease from the west with mostly sunny skies to return by the start of the weekend.
